... and Liv's husband, Larry -- the "odd man out" (and group photographer).

Some of the group arrived the evening before.

Friday morning: planning the day's activities:

... a quick tour of the hotel and its Storstuggu Conference Center, ...

... followed by a walk into town ...

... for lunch, ...

... sightseeing, ...

... and shopping.

Friday evening: the gang's all here!

... and they sat in the corner and visited well into the night.

Saturday morning: explore the town's mining past, ...

... crossing the stream that had powered the mills, ...

... climbing the now-historic (!) slag-heaps, ...

... and touring the shanties in their shadows.

The tour was also supposed to include the church, but it was closed for a private music-recording session, ...

... so we just stood out in the cold & rain & looked at the walls.

(We came back later and saw the inside:
it's painted with a special -- and expensive -- copper-blue paint.)

Go to the mining museum, ...

... which has working scale-models of the old facilities.

The group takes a taxi-van to the old mine at Olafsgruven.

Grab yourself a hard-hat, ...

... and follow group-leader Åse ...

... into the heart of the old copper mine.

(Here's the copper-compound blue used in the church's paint.)

Back to Røros in time for dinner:

... a short walk to the restaurant, ...

... and everyone is ready for dinner

... and wine.

Walk back up to the hotel ...

... for a night-cap ...

... and a late-night PowerPoint (!)

And Sunday: everyone goes their own way, be it by train, plane, or automobile! Until next year...!
